Noxopharm Announces First COVID-19 Patient Treated in Veyonda® Study

Thu, October 8, 2020, 11:00 PM GMT+11 · 2 mins read

As the number of COVID-19 cases and deaths continues to rise in most countries, Australian clinical-stage drug development company Noxopharm is pleased to announce treatment of the first patient with its lead pipeline candidate, Veyonda®, in the Company's Phase 1 NOXCOVID-1 study.

NOXCOVID-1 is looking at treating those COVID-19 patients hospitalized with moderate lung dysfunction requiring low oxygen support who are at risk of progressing rapidly into requiring intensive care and mechanical ventilation. This rapid progression increasingly is being seen as an inappropriately strong inflammatory reaction known as a cytokine storm by the body's immune system in response to lung damage caused by the virus.

The experimental anti-cancer drug, Veyonda®, joins a number of approved and experimental drugs with an anti-inflammatory action being tested globally for their ability to block rapid progression of COVID-19 disease from moderate to severe level.

Melbourne (Australia) has shown that part of the anti-cancer effect of Veyonda® is an anti-inflammatory effect stemming from potent inhibition of the STING signalling pathway.

"It's a testament to the skill of our scientific team and our external research collaborators that we have been able to identify the potential application of Veyonda® in the treatment of COVID-19 and have been able to use our prior oncology-focused work to address this new and urgent global need," said Noxopharm's Chief Medical Officer Gisela Mautner. "It is our hope that Veyonda® will lessen the severity of COVID-19 and improve the recovery of affected patients worldwide."

The NOXCOVID-1 trial will enroll up to approximately 40 patients, with enrollment due to be completed before the end of the year.
